TWO Thursday Island sisters are to feature in a new documentary about Australia's leaders of tomorrow, exploring the lives of our brightest young Indigenous trailblazers.

Amelya and Lilly See Kee are currently boarding at St Monica's College in Cairns on Australian Indigenous Education Foundation (AIEF) Scholarships.

Both girls are described as outgoing and confident, and enjoy fishing and camping when home.

The program, Changing Our Nation, will broadcast on Sky News and Sky News on WIN on Thursday, December 10, at 6pm (Qld time) anchored by FOX Sports presenter Yvonne Sampson.

Amelya is in Year 10 and would like to pursue a career as a teacher, while Lilly, in Year 8, is thinking about becoming a doctor.

Both sisters enjoy sports, traditional art and volunteer to contribute to cultural and college events.

Amelya and Lilly's parents are Michelle and Adam See Kee, of Thursday Island.

Sky News describes the documentary as one of the most-inspirational television events of the year and will take viewers on a journey from our country's most-remote towns to the cities' leading classrooms in the one-hour documentary.

The documentary follows a group of students enrolled in the Australian Indigenous Education Foundation (AIEF) scholarship program, an initiative dedicated to giving Indigenous students the opportunity to pursue their education at leading Australian boarding schools and universities.

During the program, the students show their educational voyage, showcasing how, through schooling and empowerment, Indigenous youth from the most-remote parts of our country can take full advantage of the opportunities before them, becoming leaders of tomorrow and inspiring generations to come.
